Trump and Globalisation

There is a general fear among nations that Trump's regime would bring globalization to a grinding halt. The international media also has been projecting Trump as a villain to the phenomenon called globalization. The fears are true to an extent, because resistance to globalisation was Trump's foremost policy theme in the election campaign. Trump assured voters that in his first 100 days, he will touch upon three major issues: trade, energy and jobs. He expressed strongly that the production should not go out of the homeland and outsourcing should be cut drastically and import of crude oil should be further reduced. Trump's statements created a panic situation among nations and business corporations which trade directly and indirectly with the US.

Many Indian IT companies also expressed their concern about the possible threat to their business in Trump's regime. According to the Reserve Bank of India, North America accounts for 60% of India's IT exports. Trump in his book "Time To Get Tough" advocated a 15% tax on companies that outsource jobs to countries such as India and 20% tax for importing goods and services. Trump also threatened Ford Motor Company that if they continue to manufacture cars in other countries they would have to pay a penalty up to 35% duty on cars made in Mexico and India. All his policy matters directly violate the principles of the WTO. Trump shocked supporters of globalization when he said that on day one of assuming office he would scrap the Trans Pacific Partnership TPP, a free trade agreement covering 12 countries. TPP is a flagship policy of Obama administration which was agreed in 2015 but has not yet been ratified. The Obama administration went ahead with TPP as it could reassert the US hegemony over China. Many experts of international trade and international relations felt that this move could arrest China's aggression in the world arena. Trump's willingness to pull out of TPP shocked his own countrymen. The European Union which is yet to come out of the Brexit shock has a new problem to handle, that is Trump's trade policy towards the EU. He has created "globophobia" even before assuming office.

However, one has to realize that all American presidents, whether it is Obama, or Bush, during their campaigns, also promised their countrymen that outsourcing of jobs and imports will be cut drastically. But, in due course of time they realized that it is easier said than done. When Mr Bush said that outsourcing of jobs to India will be stopped, Mr. Bill Gates responded saying that "If that is the case we will move our head office from Seattle to Bangalore". When Trump mentioned that he may even pull out of the WTO, the entire world felt it is a challenge for globalization. Unlike his predecessors Trump is more dramatic. He will soon realize that he cannot make economics stand on its head. Though at the moment Trump's policy matters challenge globalization, he will be forced to mellow down in the interest of his nation.
