Introduction

Artificial Intelligence (AI) refers to the capability of a machine to imitate intelligent human behavior. It encompasses a wide range of technologies, including machine learning, understanding language, recognizing images, making decisions, solving problems, etc. AI can be used in everything from chatbots and virtual assistants. The ultimate goal of AI is to build systems that can mimic human cognitive functions to solve problems, make decisions, and improve their capabilities as they learn from experience.

AI has been increasingly applied in library and information science, enhancing various aspects of how libraries operate and how information is accessed and managed. Library professionals need to understand and evaluate AI's limits and their implications on the profession. There is an immediate need among the professionals to develop and gradually master AI Literacy. There have been some proven changes that have been adopted by the librarians due to development in AI.

The proposed workshop enables wider and informed participation of professionals in policy discussion on AI related aspects in the context of library and information work. Once the professionals are equipped sufficiently with AI literacy they can help regulate and develop library and information service infrastructure and policy.
